LaMaster’s Rambunctious Teaching Style Often Sends Students Charging toward Positive Results

John LaMaster will never be replaced by an artificial intelligence program. The host server’s circuits would explode too often.

A senior instructor in the Department of Mathematical Sciences at Purdue Fort Wayne, LaMaster, B.A. ’86, M.S. ’91, is an atypical and nontraditional teacher blasting through stereotypes in precalculus and calculus courses.

Some students tentatively enter his classroom dealing with intimidation, but LaMaster ips that by engaging everyone, telling them to be unafraid of mistakes. He even asks them to use his first name.

Mastodon Memories

Susan Domer, B.G.S. ’05
Marketing and public relations specialist for the College of Visual and Performing Arts

Domer started on campus as a theatre major in 1979, but left after earning an associate degree because she needed to work full-time and theatre classes were only offered during the day. She returned to campus in 2000 to her current position, and graduated in 2005 with a bachelor’s degree in general studies.
