There is no task more essential to a university’s future than the creation and adoption of a comprehensive strategic plan. During these challenging times, understanding and agreeing on institutional priorities has never been more critical. As our region, state, and nation continue to navigate the significant impact and aftermath of a global pandemic and the ensuing economic disruption, Purdue University Fort Wayne’s strength will be in its ability to think and act strategically. There is a renewed sense of urgency and purpose as we peer into the unknown and chart a course that is uniquely ours.
Purdue Fort Wayne has experienced a thrilling trajectory for the past few years—rapid, steep, and more than a little fortuitous.

The university conducted an extensive realignment process in 2018 to become an integral part of the Purdue University system. As an outgrowth of that exhaustive experience, our campus turned immediately to the task—the opportunity—of developing a new strategic plan. Our goal was at once simple and gargantuan. We set out to develop a shared vision for our university’s future and create a living document that is rooted in reality, embodies the aspirations of a reinvigorated campus, and charts a tangible course forward.

When our university community embarked on this initiative, we knew that engaging in a meaningful, campus-wide strategic planning process would be essential. We knew that a truly comprehensive, inclusive, and transparent strategic planning process would ensure that our best minds would come together to develop an agreed-upon set of principles, solutions, and milestones. We knew that, in order to ensure broad ownership, we would need to touch every corner of the university—from academics to student success, from community engagement to campus development, from athletics to student life.

The beating heart of our strategic planning process was—and continues to be—our outstanding faculty, staff, students, and others who devoted countless hours of time, creativity, and enthusiasm to thinking about what’s next. The people of Purdue Fort Wayne devoted 18 months to developing a strategic plan that will carry the university forward with confidence, drive, compassion, and purpose.

Creating and maintaining a framework for our efforts was no small feat. Our efforts were led by a broad-based Strategic Planning Steering Committee comprising a diverse mix of representatives of all facets of the university’s constituents. This incredible team provided the platform, environment, and inspiration that our campus community was craving.

The Steering Committee developed an iterative process that included dozens and dozens of meetings of committees, working groups, task forces, aspirational teams, and action planning teams. One daylong working session, in particular, included more than 300 individuals who were dedicated to building the plan.

The university’s leadership team—vice chancellors, deans, and faculty leaders—worked diligently to clarify, ratify, and champion the work at every stage. From beginning to end, we were expertly guided in our work by our consultant, Strategic Focus Associates.

Central to our early work—indeed, to all that we do—was the development of new mission, vision, and values statements. Our community determined that these principles, which we could all embrace and advance, were necessary in order to set baselines for understanding and positioning the university. Equipped with that common language and mutual understanding, our work gained clarity and direction.

Our new plan was developed within four overarching aspirations: Champion Student Success; Enhance Quality of Place; Embrace Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion; and Promote Engagement with Our Communities. The objectives and strategic activities for each of these aspirations are outlined in the following pages.

We now embark on implementation of this ambitious strategic plan. We must put it to work and bring it to life. As we do so, I wish to recognize and thank every single member of our university community for their creativity and tenacity in delivering a strategic plan that will lift our university to new heights of excellence. As we celebrate the victories and accomplishments ahead, let us also celebrate the hundreds of individuals whose indelible mark can be found on this plan.
